This summer, third year cadets from the Army ROTC program attended Advanced Camp, which is a 35-day training and evaluation at Fort Knox, Kentucky. Advanced Camp is a culmination of skills and information learned throughout their time in the ROTC program. Following those 35 days, most cadets go back to their hometowns, some cadets go to follow-on training such as internships. Here, cadets shadow various officers in a field they are interested in to get a better understanding of said field.

Cadet Andrew Johnson

I had the opportunity to intern with the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate attached the XVIII Airborne Corps at Fort Bragg. During my internship I shadowed various Captains going about their day-to-day duties, trying cases and assisting soldiers with legal matters. I personally helped by doing research on breaches of contract, divorce regulations, Human Resource Command’s ability to change duty stations for soldiers, and security clearance violations. Other than my legal duties, I did pt every day with the unit, rode a Black Hawk, and toured the military working dog facility and given the opportunity to test the bite suit. The entire experience only reinforced my desire to pursue a career as an attorney in the US Army JAG Corps.
